The Lord of All!—Was there on earth
Fe palace, crown'd with stately dome
Where thou couldst feel thyself at he
To give the great Redomer birth?

Oh, Virgin Mother! thus it was?
Thy Sen was born to suffer shame,
To bear our sins and were He came,
Left His high throne to bear the cross

Ob. Mary ! highly favor'd One!
Did not the Angel bid three "Hail!"
And from the future lift the veil
Thou Mother of th' Incarnate Son! Then what was poverty to thee?
While gazing on thy stolers Child
What rase from Heaven upon thee
And hallow'de'en thy low degree!

Ye poor of earth! oh, never more Lamest ye for your low estate
Since He, who did all things create,
Lived here, the poorest of the poor!

It was to raise your souls to Heaven
That Jeaus suffer'd pun and loss;
He bore the shame, and bore the cross,
That 'all things' might to you be given.

The poor and lowly of the earth
He loves with a peculiar love,
Who, now in glory throned above,
Remembers well his lowly birth.

Ye are his best-belov'd, ye poor! And while, for spiritual foo i, He gives vou His own fish and blood, Your bread and water shall be sure.

Lift up your weary bests and see Tre glores of your beavenly home!
There soon your L ri will bid you come
And sing the song of Victory.

A Cruise to the Cannibal Islands

A Tale of Adventure in the South Pacific.

BY F. CLINTON BARRINGTON. Author of "The Lady Imogen." "Kate Wyhard, "The Young Fisherman." "Pitz-Hern." "The Bel-Isabel," "Conrado de Beltran," etc.

Next beyond Mary Lizzie, lay the forms of her father and mother, the Earl of Dowlingshire, and the Countess. To these noble victims came the destroyer, spurning their prostrate bodies with his foot, while a vengeful glow appeared upon his swarthy features. "And I rather expected you," he added, look" ing from one to the other. "My early acquaintance with you, madam, was not very pleasing; but I expect my last interview will be satisfactory to me-quite pleasing-quite!" From the Eari's great coat he drew a bu'ky package of papers, and placed them in the inner pocket of his own, after a heaty glance at the most important. "There's the will," he muttered, "with securities and various documents relating to his en xmous wealth. It's all right-all right."

From those august persons he then took the watches, rings, money, all their valuables, making a collection of them in a basket which came to his hand, and adding the various articles of value he could collect from his other victime, nearly filling the basket with them all togeth-

And then that being laughed—a low and hollow chuckle—and soilloquised:

"All of them are safe, save that sailor, Jack Binracle, in the state room yonder. He's too sick to have esten any of the drugged supper and is therefore able to be stirring. I had bette go and strike him to the heart at once. It is sime that I had made sure of him, in some way or other. A ready has he made an impression on my intended there, which she will never for

Placing his hand upon a concealed weapon, he advanced toward the state room in question, with noiseless foo steps, listening, in utter silence, with murder no less plainly written on his countenance, than in the rigidity of his hand and

"Now for it," he said to himself, opening the state room door, and hastening within, only to recoil with a cry of surprise. The intended victim's couch was empty. Bin-kelurning to the end of the dining table, the villain stood still a moment—looked anxiously around-listened. "Men!" he cried. The two waiters showed themselves from the state room they had entered. "What did you do with that sailor a few mo

"Put him in his state room, there," was the 'Strange! He's vanished like a vapor.'

The mystery was that the two russians had deposited Binnace in the state room adjoining his own. "So! venish egain-four."

The two waiters retired.

"Perhaps the gul's only in a faint," muttered Gunnels, the moment's defeat making him cautious. "The little of the drug she took with the apple, would not keep her askep a great while. I might have fr ghtered her so—finding her with Binnacle—:hat she could not est any supper. In that case, she may recover her senses any moment. He couldn's bave recognized me, when I locked in upon the couple, as the Meibourne assessin, or as the author of the recent attack-no, no. Mary L zzie may have merely fainted at finding her parents and friends in this condition, and be already coming to hersen, that better, to make sure of her, stow her away in Binnacle's state room, and lock her in, 1'il do

He raised the insensible girl in his arms, and conveyed her to the couch but so recently occupied by Jack Binnac'e. He there left her after kissing her several times, and muttering his criminal admiration of her charms. "Now for the treasure list," he then said turning the key of the state room door in the lock. "I must get all ready for retreat. The sloop was on the weather bow at sunset, and will soon be beating down this way again Strange where that Bunnecle can have vanished to so suddenly. But I'll keep on my guard against him, and then all will be safe. As to those four tools of mine," he added, lowering his voice, "those two fullows in the forecast'e, and these two here, they've done the work marked out for them, and received their reward. I want no confederates to witness my triumph, nor live to share in the gain. A deadly poison is now burning in their veios. In ten minutes they will be helpless-in an hour they will be

CHAPTER III.

THE TRYASURE.—THE VICTOR IN THE CAGE-

Proceeding to the Commander's state room, light in hand, Gunnels commenced a careful search. He seen discovered about thirty bags of gold, and twice that number of bars—the latter shining and alistening as he gathered them into a heap on the floor. "That belonged to the English Government,"

"See muttered, "se its share of the yield of the Australian mines, for one season; but it's now made over to me. I hate the English government, in its every official, from the highest to the lowest, with a perfectly rabid hatred, and mitting. I mean to get paid for the flesh and blood coined from me in Botany Bay, and elsewhere, that is all, and poy Dowlingshire for his share in the evidence that sent me there. Oh, curse them—curse them!"

Continuing his investigations, Gunnels acc had possession of the gold dust, bullion and specie belonging to the passengers; all this, with the government treasure, forming an aggregate far surpassing the highest anticipations he had ever

"Ha, ba!" he laughed. "I have succeeded. The wealth of the ladies is mine. The hour of my triumph has come."

Taking a lantern from a side table, he put ou all the cabin lights, and went out to his cage, paying no heed to the rising winds. Drawing a piece of red chalk from his pocket, he held up his lantern, so that he could see the inscription on the lid of the box.

"To the Earl of-" he read aloud. "Seeing that I am about to take my final departure from this vessel, I may as well direct this present to its full address."

It was soon done. "To the Earl of Dowlingshire," he then read. "That's it, as plain as day. Only one thing re-

He produced a key from his vest pocket, and unlocked the box, raising the lid, and accidentally upsetting his lantern at the same moment, Not an instant did he pause to regard the object in the cage, but drew his knife and plunged it into the restless figure repeatedly, laughing as the victim's blood spurted forth upon his hand and arm. Half a dozen blows, or more, and then that remorseless being listened.

A faint moan came from the victim, but there was no movement-no other indication of

"He's done for," soli'oquised Gunnels, drop. ping a paper into the box, and he closed down the lid, and made it secure as before, "and there he is, written explanaton and all. Ha, ha! When the Earl comes out of that deathly sleep, ke'll find a nice present in this box. And when he gets home to England, some dark night, perhape, a year hence, he will receive a midnight visit, and thereafter there will be a new propti etor of the Dowlingshire estates. Thus step by step, I am coming to the fulfilment of my revenge. As to Mary Lizzie, I shall take her with me in the sloop, of course." He retraced his steps towards the cabin, adding in a lower tone : "Well has he borne in mind my threat to kill him at the faintest cry. Well has he believed my statement that all persons aboard of this ship, were my tools, or he might have summoned

From the man at the wheel, a confederate Gunnels; there now came a loud cry of:

"The sloop, again—the sloop!" A signal rocket had suddenly shot high int the air on the lee quarter.

"I see it," rejoined Gunnels, joyfully. "The sloop is just in time to take me off with the tressure. Orliff has been faithful, Taking myself of, and leaving these persons to their fate, it cannot be said that I destroyed them, whatever may occur to them after I am gone." Up and down the deck walked Gunnels, draw ing an empty vial from his bosom, and flinging it hissing away into the waters. "I only put them to sleep for a few hours," h added. "That was all—that was all. I would not harm one of them for worlds—oh, no! The steward had his suspicions, but I succeeded at

A flash, as of a cannon, again indicated the whereabouts of the sloop, some two or three miles away on the lee quarter. "Yes, yes! that's Or iff," said Gunnels, thoughtfully, "but-" To be Continued.
